

CAMPAIGN PERFORMANCE REPORT

Summer Flash Sale

CLICK RATE

1 The headline

Deliverability is clean and the store converts well — but the email itself didn't earn enough clicks, and that's where nearly all the lost revenue is.

The good news: the fix is entirely in the email, not the plumbing or the checkout — and it's now been applied.

2 Results vs industry benchmark

Benchmarks are Klaviyo's 2026 Health & Beauty campaign averages.

Metric	This campaign	H&B benchmark	Where you landed
Open rate	19.5%	30.5%	64% of benchmark below
Click rate	0.39%	1.24%	31% of benchmark well below
Placed-order rate	0.04%	0.19%	22% of benchmark below
Unsubscribe	0.18%	~0.2%	in range ok
Spam complaints	0.00%	<0.02%	excellent great
Bounce	1.0%	<2%	healthy ok

Revenue: £449.88 from 13 orders (£34.61 average order value). Every engagement metric is below benchmark, and click rate is the worst — a third of where it should be. That's the single most important number in this report.

3 The funnel — where it breaks

Opened → Clicked: of everyone who opened, only 2% clicked (122 of 6,118). A healthy figure is nearer 10%. The email gets opened and then fails to move people to act.

Clicked → Ordered: of the 122 who clicked, 13 ordered — a 10.7% conversion rate. That's healthy. Your website turns clicks into sales just fine.

The bottleneck is unambiguous: it's not deliverability, and it's not the store. It's the email's ability to generate a click. Everything downstream works.

4 One caveat on the open rate

The 19.5% open rate is softer than it looks. Apple's Mail app auto-registers an "open" on every email for privacy reasons — so a chunk of those 6,118 are machines, not people. The true human open rate is lower still. This is why the click and revenue numbers — which can't be faked — are the ones to steer by, not opens.

5 What people actually clicked

Link	Unique clicks
The Glow Edit (£32)	41
Shop all / collections	39
Homepage	38
Malibu Beach Duo (£28)	19
Refund policy	5
Terms of Service	3

The Glow Edit was the top performer — the lower-priced entry product pulled the most clicks. Worth leading with it, or giving it more prominence, next time.

People clicked through to find your Refund Policy. Shoppers were looking for reassurance the email didn't give them. Real-world proof of the trust gap — they had to go hunting for it.

 One bug (now fixed): a Google Fonts stylesheet link was being tracked as a clickable link (5 clicks) — a leftover font reference in the email body. It has been removed in the updated version.

6 What's working — keep doing it

- ✓ Deliverability is genuinely healthy: 0 spam complaints, 1% bounce, and authentication (SPF/DKIM/DMARC) all verified passing. Nothing here is holding you back.
- ✓ The store converts: 10.7% of clickers bought. The checkout and product pages are doing their job.
- ✓ List hygiene is respected: 843 suppressed contacts were correctly skipped, and spam complaints are zero.

One thing to check: ~1,830 sent emails (about 5%) didn't register as delivered or bounced. Worth a look at the Deliverability tab to confirm nothing's being quietly blocked.

7 The opportunity, in money

If this same campaign had merely hit the industry-average click rate (1.24%) — everything else held constant:

~£1,440

389 clicks → ~41 orders — roughly 3× what it made. At the benchmark order rate it's nearer £2,000 (4.6×). Illustrative, not promises — but they size the prize.

The gap between £450 and ~£1,500 is almost entirely “getting more of the people who opened to click” — which is squarely fixable, and is what the changes on the next pages target.

8 How to improve it — prioritised

DO FIRST — REMOVE THE HESITATION THAT'S KILLING CLICKS

- 1 Add a trust bar under the hero — Free UK delivery over £30 · 14-day money-back guarantee · Pay in 3 with Klarna · Dispatched in 1–3 days. You offer all of these and the email showed none. ✓ Applied
- 2 Put the money-back guarantee front and centre. Self-tan's biggest blocker is "what if it's the wrong shade?" — neutralise it and say so. ✓ Applied
- 3 Add Klarna to the £59 kit ("3 payments of £19.67"). BNPL lifts conversion and softens the top price. ✓ Applied
- 4 Lead with The Glow Edit — the data says it's your click magnet. Next send

DO NEXT — LIFT OPENS AND CLICKS STRUCTURALLY

- 5 Sunset unengaged subscribers and segment engaged-first — raises open and inbox placement over time.
- 6 Start collecting product reviews (post-purchase flow). Star ratings are the highest-ROI trust signal and you have none to show.
- 7 Escape the Promotions tab with a lighter image-to-text balance and a re-engagement ask.

HOUSEKEEPING

- 8 Fixed the tracked-font-link bug ✓ done; consider a Thursday-evening send; add real UTM tags for cleaner attribution.

9 Bottom line for the client

This campaign was technically well-delivered and reached a large, clean list with zero spam complaints — the hard infrastructure is sound. It under-performed because the email didn't give people enough reason, or enough reassurance, to click — proven by a 2% click-to-open rate against a store that converts clicks at 11%.

The revenue opportunity (roughly 3×) is real and sits entirely in the email's content and trust signals — all low-effort, and the highest-impact ones are now applied. Next send: same list, same deliverability, but with the trust and clarity fixes below.

What changed in the email

The four highest-impact trust fixes are now live in the updated creative. Each directly answers a question shoppers were hesitating on — the same reassurance they were leaving the email to hunt for.

1

Trust bar under the hero

Answers shipping, risk, payment and speed in one glance — the four questions that cause hesitation.

✓ Free UK delivery over £30 · ✓ 14-day money-back guarantee ·
✓ Pay in 3 with Klarna · ✓ Dispatched in 1–3 days

2

Klarna on the £59 Glow Kit

“3 payments of £19.67” softens the top price — BNPL materially lifts conversion on the highest-ticket bundle.
